FREDERICK.

written to the British ambassador, Sir Julian Pauncefote, in behalf of Wm. Leonard, the condemned murdere: of Jesse Anderson, Leonard has himself written to the ambas- which he had tried to torture an indorse- nexation. He should, therefore, much have sador urging him to use his influence in having his sentence commuted to imprisonment for life. He states that the murder was unpremeditated, and done in a moment when the effects of liquor made him partly Henry Brown, a faithful old colored man, of Howard Magruder, near Pierce's distillery, this county, was riding with his son yesterday on a load of hay. While passing resolution." along the load near Centerville the son happened to look around and saw that his father had disappeared from the wagon. He stopped the team and went back to look for him, finally finding him lying in the road dead. It is supposed the old man was road dead. It is supposed the old man was seized with sickness and in falling broke his neck, which resulted in instant death.

The people of Frederick county are much gratified at the action of the Maryland legislature in voting to set aside the age limit in the case of Associate Judge John A. Lynch, in order that he may serve out the full term for which he was elected and the full term for which he was elected, and which does not expire until 1897, although he would reach the age limit in 1895. he would reach the age limit in 1805.

From the persistency with which the "green goods" men of New York city dog the citizens of Frederick with their circulars one might suppose that they found this a profitable field, although it is probably not the case. Within the past few days another lot of such circulars has been received here, setting forth how and where to get the "goods."

the debate in the Senate on the Hawaiian In addition to the letter which has been resolution continued on interesting lines, Mr. Gray was required to answer a num-

"Rather too much has been said in regard to reflections on the President. The "Interest today to bring peace to Senator from Delaware says that the substitute excludes an indorsement or quasi indorsement of the President, on account who had lived for twenty years on the farm of his withdrawing the Hawaiian treaty from the Senate; and that the substitute differs in that respect from the committee's

> Gray remarked, "that the Senator from Missouri intended any reflection on the President. I merely wished to point out that there was absolutely no difference be-tween that part of his substitute and the first clause of the committee's resolution." Mr. Honr's Question.

"Did the Senator from Delaware state that the purpose of the committee in reporting this resolution was to indorse the President's action on 'withdrawing the treaty?" asked Mr. Hoar. "I did not," said Mr. Gray. "I stated what was my understanding."

"I supposed," said Mr. Hoar, "that the fact that the President had withdrawn the treaty and had vacated his opinion that annexation ought not to be considered, was one of the facts and circumstances that might lead the committee and the Senate to say that it is not worth while for us to consider it. But if anybody claims, or pretends, that this resolution is intended to say that, if the President were willing and ready to consider it now, we should not be that would present a very serious question

Mr. Frye's Vigorous Appeal. MR. SHERMAN'S VIEWS. Mr. Frye made a temperate, but very vig-Hawaiian people from the apprehension ber of questions by his colleagues as to waitan Islands and the best interests of sington" with all the powers and privihis construction of the resolution, out of the United States of America required an-those islands if it was in the power of the those islands if it was in the power of the republic to do so. The people of the Hawaiian Islat ds had believed for the last six months that the government of the United States was determined to destroy what they considered as their liberties and their rights. Relief had come to them, to some extent, when the President sent his message to Congress. They had heard of it a fortnight ago, and that had brought them some relief. He had recently received a "I did not say, or intend to say," Mr.

a fortnight ago, and that had brought them some relief. He had recently received a letter from a refined and cultivated lady tiving in Honolulu, in which this sentence occurred: "For three months life in this beautiful island, this paradise of the ocean, has been heil upon earth."

"Let the Senate adopt this resolution," he said, "and let it be sent across the continent and across the magnificent Pacific ocean down to the paradise of the Pacific, and let the hearts of these people once more be assured that they are not to be attacked by the troops of their own government."

Mr. Platt said that he would probably vote for the resolution, although he regretted that any allusion had been made in it to the subject of annexation. He desired it to be understood that he should be very glad to vote for a resolution or an act annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, and so his vote for the committee's resolution must not be considered as a vote against the project of

Mr. Sherman also spoke in favor of the resolution, but, like Mr. Frye and other members of the foreign relations committee, took an entirely different view of its "For one I do not know," replied Mr. The resolution, he said, seemed to cover Gray, "whether the President within the two essential points which were absolutely remaining years of his term would favor, necessary, not only to the quiet and peace under different conditions, annexation or of the United States, but to the quiet and meaning from that advanced by Mr. Gray.

was a notice given to foreign nations—whether of Asia or of Europe—that the affairs of the Sandwich Islands are matters in which the United States has a deep interest. The relations of the United States to those islands were peculiar. Enormous sums of American money had been invested there in developing the islands by admitting their sugar free of duty while a duty of two cents a pound was imposed on all other sugar imported into the United States. In this way the islands had been benefited to the amount of at least $46,000,000. With such an interest in the islands it was right was a notice given to foreign to the amount of at least $46,000,000. With such an interest in the Islands it was right and proper that notice should be given to all the nations of Europe and Asia that they must not interfere with the local affairs of the Hawaiian Islands, or that, if they did so, their act would be a disappointment and offense to the government and people of the United States. A Vital Point.

The clause in the resolution as to the provisional government having been duly recognized he regarded as a vital point because, if it were a de facto government, the President of the United States had no power to disturb it. The first clause as to its being unwise and inexpedient to consider a project of annexation at this time did not commit anyone, either for or against annexation. He was in favor of against annexation. He was in favor of annexation on certain conditions. If the islands were to be annexed, he would favor attaching them to the state of California. In that way they could have laws and proper government. The constitution of the United States had not been framed for dependencies. It had been formed for states. And he trusted that the time was not far distant when every portion of the country. And he trusted that the time was not far distant when every portion of the country would be within the limits of a state. He should be very glad to see Utah attached to the state of Nevada, if the people of Nevada would consent. And he would be glad to have New Mexico and Arizona united together. And so Alaska ought either to be attached to Washington or Oregon. In that way local governments could be given to those people. That was the general idea. Therefore, notwithstanding the first clause of the resolution, he was in favor of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, if they could be attached to California, the people of that state having very large interests in the islands. He did notwink, however, that this was the ume to take that step. The resolution time to take that step. The resolution simply said that under existing conditions it was not advisable to consider now any project of annexation. Why? Because the Senate could not see exactly what disposition should be made of the native population.

Why Mr. Allison Opposed It. Mr. Ailison opposed the resolution because it was shown by the remarks of Mr. Gray that two constructions could be put upon it. He did not want it to be said that the Senate had indorsed Mr. Cleveland's action in the matter. Le said it seemed to be (as stated by Mr. Frye) a resolution for the purpose of composing the situation in Hawaii. If that should be the result he would be willing to strain many points and give it the sanction of his vote. But he did not like the phraseology found in the first part of the resolution, especially since the explanation given to it by Mr. Gray. If the resolution committed the Serate in any way to the policy declared by the President he would not vote for it. If consideration of a project of annexation were unwise now, it was unwise last Febreary, when the committee on foreign rela-tions reported favorably a treaty made with the provisional government. The same provisional government that existed then existed now, strengthened and invigorated by the trials and tribulations through which it had passed, in the presence of a executive and of the nostile guns of the United States. If it was the purpose of the Senate in agreeing to the resolution to quiet the situation in Hawaii, why could it not be done, he asked, without any ex-pression of opinion on the subject of an-nexation? They all knew that annexation mexation? They all knew that annexations was impossible in existing conditions—conditions existing not in Hawaii, but in the United States, and that would probably exist during the occupation of the presidential chair by Mr. Cieveland.

Mr. Dolph, another member of the com-mittee on foreign relations, said that he had not favored the resolution in commit-tee and did not favor it now. Like the Sen-ator from Maine (Mr. Frye), he was in favor of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.
